The height of this tower is fifty-three feet, and the breadth fifty-four; two sides of it are broken down, and on one corner, still remaining, are the evident marks of violence made by the cannon shot fired against it. What still remains of this tower is so well built, and strongly cemented, that it seems to promise a long duration. There is also the remains of one other entrance into the castle on the East side, where the grooves of the portcullis are yet discernable between two semi-circular pillars. These pillars and two others next the river, of beautiful workmanship, seem to have been the work of later times, and evidently meant as buttresses to strengthen the ancient wall. Behind the Court-House, at a few yards distance, is the remains of an arched subterraneous passage from thence into the moat: This no doubt was very useful...
