Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Classical Review, Vol. 25 The death of Mr. S. H. Butcher is lamented by the public with a sense of personal loss, and has raised among men of letters, and specially in the spheres of classical learning and education, a dismay and consternation, to which something has contributed beyond the admiration due to a singularly brilliant, harmonious, and beneficent career, and to a legacy of writings, not indeed very large, but all of high quality and, in part at any rate, of great and permanent value. We lose a living type and representation, such as is not and cannot be often seen, of that humanity, that sweet and noble facility of social and intellectual intercourse, which the study of letters should produce or promote. We suffer the eclipse of an ideal. And the loss is especially sensible at a time when everywhere, and not least in this country, the due adjustment of relations between the literary basis and the other elements of culture is matter of debate and difficulty, temporary as we may hope...
