From earliest times it was one of those fundamental industries that formed the economic basis for the growth of the country; and the industry continued to be one of the most important in the United States down to the Civil War. Since then shipbuilding has not enjoyed a proper share of the general progress and prosperity of American industries, and the United States has not been able to build ships as cheaply as they can be built in some of the European countries. The loss of our prestige as shipbuilders has been a matter of chagrin to all patriotic citizens and a special grievance to those engaged in shipbuilding and navigation. Therefore, citizens interested in our national welfare, have united with shipbuilders and shipowners in imploring the aid of the government to restore the industry to the high place which it occupied...
